Should I Be Talking To An Elder Law Attorney?

Take a moment and see for yourself if you need to be seriously concerned about a loved one's long term care its threat to your family's financial security.

- Have you, your spouse, or a loved one been exhibiting signs of memory loss?
- Do you have a spouse or loved one who should not be driving?
- Do you have a spouse or loved one who is becoming increasingly confused? Who misplaces frequently used items, and then loses their temper about misplacing such objects?
- Are you concerned about a loved one's nutrition, lack of hygiene or the cleanliness of their house?
- Are you intentionally "not talking about" some of these things with your affected loved one?
- Are you concerned about how to pay for care for you, your spouse, or a loved who has been diagnosed with dementia, Parkinson's, Alzheimer's or other debilitating disease?
- Do you or your loved one have significant assets to protect (home, a business, savings and/or investments)?
- Are you uncertain as to what you can and cannot do to protect your assets?
- Are you or your family already suffering financially, emotionally and/or physically from meeting the increasing care needs of a spouse or loved one?
- Are you a Veteran, or surviving spouse of a Veteran, who has high medical bills or is in need of in-home care, or should be moving into an Assisted Living Community, or a Skilled Nursing Facility (nursing home)?
